

Get your Tidbit awareness one Bite at a time; get your awareness in a Nutshell at: www.bitesizeawareness.com

Perception: how we perceive reality?

Do you see why all of the countries that made up the Third World are in Africa? I will help you adjust your perception to the reality of this world. Here before you black and white, the difference between them is in our perception; how we arrive at perceiving them as colors. Here before you are two colors that mark the beginning and the ending of a wave length of light, black and white. This wave length of light played itself out in life in actuality. You can actually see it played out on our television screen from time to time. Recently I was looking at the news coming from Africa; looking at former President Bill Clinton visiting Africa. He is one of the personalities behind the Global Initiative movement against poverty. It is not without cause that this Global initiative is concentrated its effort in Africa. In Africa more people live in dire poverty than any other place on earth. http://bitesizeawareness.com/Newsletter_3.html

Why Africa is Called the Dark Continent?

Africa is called the Dark Continent for one reason and one reason only; it is because the majority of the people who inhabit that part of the world are blacks. You can see how reality played itself out in life by looking at a wave length of light. We perceive black as a color because in a wave length of light black as a color marks the beginning of the wave, it is the absence of light, or less light but as the wave progress, light or radiant energy is increases to a maximum brilliance until we perceive it as white light as such reality for blacks in real life is a reflection of the wave. They have less and white have the most. This simple analogy proves that dispensation on earth is modeled after light wave energy. Here before you the disparities that exist between Blacks and Whites are proportionate to the disparity that exists between the two marking points of the wave, the beginning and the ending. http://bitesizeawareness.com/Newsletter_3.html

What is it you ask?

I will tell you why people of the Third World cannot create first rated world for themselves to live; it is because they are cut off from the blessing of God; cut off from the possibilities of this world; their consciousness is barred from venturing to the heavenly regions where they can find inspiration to solve their problems, overcome obstacles out of their way. They are stuck in a state of fixation, their consciousness is fixated on one need which caused them to be bewildered and confuse. As a result they become fragmented and cannot function collectively to do great enterprising.

I believe that they need a passport to the blessing of God.

I believe that passport is Righteousness; which is a way of being; that is knowing right from wrong; how to treat others without being told to. It is only through righteousness that we are eligible to partake in the Blessing of God. Some of us need to develop a sense of righteousness or righteousness must first become second nature to us before we can partake in the abundance of this world. For some of us the first thing that comes to mind is opportunity, opportunity to capitalize on the weakness of our brothers and sisters, not embracing the shortcomings and weaknesses of our fellow human beings.